Body, Blood and Water

Jean Allen

Mark's account of the institution of the Eucharist is short and to the point but John's account speaks of something else and in celebrating the Body and Blood of Christ, we need to be aware of what happened right after Jesus said the words of consecration and before they all headed out to the Mount of Olives.

He washed the disciple's feet. This one action flowed – and flows – out of the Eucharist. The two actions are part and parcel of each other. As we celebrate the huge gift of the Eucharist, we need to be mindful of the fact that Jesus chose that time to wash his disciple's feet when he could have done so at any time during his ministry. If we honor the Body and Blood of Christ then we must honor foot washing as the natural flow after we receive the Eucharist.

Obviously, we're not talking about literally washing feet. But think a minute about what Jesus illustrated to his disciples. Jesus consecrated the bread and the wine of sacrifice and then he consecrated the water of service. He did not mean for the reception of his Body and Blood to be a private 'just me and Jesus' moment; his Body and Blood is meant to be shared through service to one another and the world. This service doesn't have to be big or even publicly noticeable. Even just listening compassionately to someone, refraining from criticism, affirming someone, being inclusive to someone who is alone or speaking to someone who isn't part of your friend group are foot washing actions and doing these things, or actions like them, keep the Blood of Christ circulating the way it was meant to circulate.

If we always 'receive and leave', we are blocking the full health of the Body of Christ. We know that poor circulation in our physical bodies can cause all sorts of health problems and the same is true when we practice poor Blood circulation with our community and with the world.

Keep the Blood flowing with the water of service.
